Guest Speaker, Dr Robert Bush.

You might recognise him riding around the island each month, monitoring bush-stone curlews with other members of the Queensland Wader Study Group. His presentation is, "Tracking shorebirds tells us how they live and survive in Moreton Bay: there's never been a more important time to use this information the Queensland Ornithological Society, current member Queensland Wader Study Group management committee and the Australasian Wader Study Group Board. He supports research on shorebirds across the migration flyway from the southern States of Australia to the Arctic circle in Russia. Robert has undertaken field work on shorebirds within sub-Arctic Russia, around the Yellow Sea in China, across South-east Asia and throughout Australia as a member of international teams over the past decade.

He has provided advice to policy makers, documentary makers and media programs such as Four Corners on Shorebird Conservation. Robert has a strong interest in supporting nature in urban environments and has published peer reviewed research in scientific journals including Nature on the impact of green spaces on human population disease prevention, health and well-being. He recently reported on shorebird conservation achievements over the past 30 years in Moreton Bay to the Australasian Wader Study conference in Hobart, Tasmania.

Robert is an active member of the alliance of organizations lead by Birdlife Australia and the Australian Conservation Foundation working to respond to the Toondah Harbour Environmental Impact Statement submitted by the developer, the Walker Corporation, to the Federal Government.
